

Assignment

Task-1: Add bi-grams and n-gram features on byte files and improve the log-loss

Task-2: Using the 'dchad' github account (<https://github.com/dchad/malware-detection>), decrease the logloss to <=0.01

Here we loaded the data from the kaggle to the gcp

In [14]:

cd train_data
```

/home/tarabhushansingh1968/train_data

In [23]:

ls
```

Here we are separating the asm files from the byte files

In [29]:

#separating byte files and asm files

we will check if the folder 'byteFiles' exists if it not there we will create a folder with the same name
if not os.path.isdir(destination):
    os.makedirs(destination)

if we have folder called 'train' (train folder contains both .asm files and .bytes files) we will rename it 'asmFiles'
for every file that we have in our 'asmFiles' directory we check if it is ending with .bytes, if yes we will move it to
'byteFiles' folder

so by the end of this snippet we will separate all the .byte files and .asm files
if os.path.isdir(source):
    os.rename(source,'asmFiles')
    data_files = os.listdir(source)
        if (file.endswith("bytes")):
            shutil.move(source+'/'+file,destination)

- In the above cell we are creating the vocabulary for the bigrams by taking the combination of every word in the bigram formate
- we first created the vocabulary of the distinct word in the bytefiles manually
- After that we splitted it in the first loop and the we are forming th combination of each word with every other word in the vocabulary string to create a bigram vocabulary in the second for loop

Observation

- By looking to the presision and recall matrix we can say that the model perfrom good on the random forest giving us the loss of 0.056 on test data
- The model perform well on the every classes except on class 5 where we get a recall of only 87.5%. We need to improve this value.

- But one good thing is there is an improvement into the misclassified points.

Observation

- Trained the lightgm model on the asm pixel intensity and byte feature data.
- The results are really good got a test log loss of 0.008.
- The misclassification is also less compared to other models.
- The recall and precision matrix values are also good for each classes.
